

Michael Nacht

Michael Nacht is Thomas and Alison Schneider Professor of Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley where he has been on the faculty since 1998. He was Aaron Wildavsky Dean of the UC Berkeley Goldman School of Public Policy from 1998-2008.

Nacht is a specialist on US national security policy and management strategies for complex organizations. He is author or co-author of five books and almost 100 journal articles and book chapters, and is the author of opinion pieces in The New York Times, the Washington Post, and the Wall Street Journal.

He has had three tours of government service, twice receiving unanimous US Senate confirmation. He served as Assistant Secretary of Defense for Global Strategic Affairs (2009-2010) for which he was given the Distinguished Public Service Award, and was Assistant Director for Strategic and Eurasian Affairs of the US Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (1994-1997) for which he received the Distinguished Honor Award. He was a missile aerodynamicist at the NASA Lewis Research Center (now the John Glenn Center) in the early days of the US manned space program.

Nacht also served on the DTRA TRAC from 2001-2004 where he chaired panels on counter-terrorism and counter-proliferation.

He holds a B.S. in Aeronautics and Astronautics and an M.S. in Operations Research from New York University and a Ph.D. in Political Science from Columbia University.